Welcome in. Take what helps; leave the rest.

This is a free printable pack for moving gently at any size, at any energy level, on any given day. No apps, no signups, no streaks to lose. Print the page you need, or all of them, and let the rest wait.

> Nothing here knows your weight, your history, or your limits. Pick the sheet that matches today's energy — not the one you wish you had. Some days that's a stretch card. Some days it's the permission slip. Both count.

What's in the pack

- Five-Minute Wake-Up Stretch — one card, six easy moves, done before the coffee cools.
- Chair Exercises — two pages of seated movement for low-energy days.
- Walk-and-Count Mileage Log — walk, count something, jot it down.
- Balance Practice — everyday steadiness, near a counter, at your own pace.
- Water-Sip Tracker — tick sips, not perfection.
- Rest-Day Permission Slip — the official-looking excuse to not move, signed by you.
- Movement Bingo — a monthly card of tiny wins. Any five in a row counts.

Printing tips

- Print at 100% / "Actual size" on letter paper. It scales fine onto A4 too.
- You keep this file; it works offline forever. Nothing is collected, nothing is tracked.

Rest-Day Permission Slip

Official styling, medically unsurprising: rest is part of the plan, not a failure of it.

Fine print, in your favor: this slip is education and encouragement, never exercise prescription. If a rest day is because something hurts or feels wrong, that's what doctors are for. Rest from movement is not rest from noticing your body.

Be it known to all, on this day

_____ (date)

I, _____, have looked honestly at today — the energy I have, the day I've had, the body I live in — and I am hereby granted full permission to rest.

What I'm allowed to skip today: _____

What still absolutely counts as taking care of myself today:

_____

Number of guilt points authorized: ☐ zero ☐ also zero

Signed: _____

Witnessed by: _____ (a pet qualifies; so does a mug of tea)

> Filed for the record: nobody is keeping score, and the plan has room in it for days like this one. That's why it's a plan and not a scoreboard.
